

An impressionistic oil painting of a mountain landscape. In the foreground, a bison stands in a field of low, reddish-brown shrubs. A dark, winding path or stream leads from the bison towards the middle ground. The middle ground is a vast, open plain with warm, orange and red tones. In the background, large, rugged mountains are covered in snow or light-colored rock, with some peaks appearing more blue and distant. The sky is a pale, hazy blue with soft, white clouds. The overall style is painterly and atmospheric.

This show brings together five painters who have spent their lifetimes in the west. Traditional realism at its best in the works of G. Russell Case and Ralph Oberg. Masterful animal portraits by artist favorite William Alther. Quintessential mountain and riverscapes by Tim Deibler. And the expressive brushwork of Walt Gonske. Over the past several decades, each of these artists have been included in prestigious group and museum shows.
