

An impressionistic painting of a house with a white picket fence and a lush garden. The house has a light-colored exterior and a dark roof. A large, vibrant garden with pink, red, and purple flowers is in the foreground, partially obscuring the fence. The painting style is thick and textured, with visible brushstrokes.

Perhaps it is all an illusion. Perhaps that's why I love painting so much, because it's the art of perfecting illusion. I work daily to turn bits of color and value into shapes and ultimately images that we might recognize and love, images that through the touch of light and personal experience might lift our spirits. Maybe time has more dimensions than past, present and future just like a good painting has more than length and width. Maybe with a little luck my work can overcome time and race like the speed of light to reach people whose lives extend beyond my own.

What would you do if you had more time?
